FREIGHT AND PASSENGER TRAFFIC

On the Railroads Entering Wheeling Shows a Gratifying Increase Just Now—The Kingwood Road to be Improved and Extended—Trouble About the Receivership of a West Virginia Road—Other Railroad News.

Work on the new Pan-Handle passenger station will be started by the contractors, Hallock Bros. and Beltz-Flading Co., this week, probably, as the terms of the contract are that ground must be broken in ten days. It is expected the buildings and car sheds will be completed and ready for occupancy early in the summer, when Wheeling will see the last of the present small, inadequate and shanty-like building. It will be a modern edifice with commodious train sheds for both the Pan-Handle and Ohio River trains, each entering the terminal on separate tracks.

The passenger traffic on roads entering Wheeling shows a considerable increase in the past two weeks, caused principally by the unusually large number of traveling men on the road. The hotel registers, too, show that the traveling influx is greater than for two years.

At a meeting of the stockholders of the Tunnelton, Kingwood & Fairchance company, held at Kingwood, John G. Bishop, W. M. O. Dawson, William G. Brown, W. G. Worley and other stockholders disposed of their interest in the company to Mr. J. Ami Martin, George C. Sturgis and three others, whose names are not made public. George C. Sturgis was elected president, J. Ami Martin vice president, secretary and general manager, and James W. Parker, treasurer. They, with A. S. Vance and George A. Walles, constitute the board of directors. Mr. Sturgis announces that the road, which is now a narrow gauge, ten miles long, extending from Tunnelton, on the Baltimore & Ohio, to Kingwood, will be made standard gauge by April. He also says that the road is to be extended to Fairchance, Pa., and to Morgantown, a distance of forty miles. It will take what is known as "Black Bottle" route, a route which has been locally famous for thirty years, passing through Reedsville and Mason-town, W. Va. The price paid for a controlling interest was $30,000. The old stockholders, all local people, secured written guarantee that the extensions should be made before disposing of their stock. The road when extended will pass through several fine coal and iron ore fields, and will open large timber areas along the Cheat river.

On the application of Adrian Vandevere, trustee of the Roaring Creek & Charleston railway company, the United States court, for the district of West Virginia, has appointed Mr. Vandevere receiver for the company. Prior to this, William Phillips, of Tucker county, had been appointed receiver by the state court. The application in the United States court is intended to supersede the action of the state court, but the receiver of the state court has refused to turn the property over to the new receiver, and the matter will be tested in the United States court when the application comes up on a final hearing of the motion to make the receivership permanent. The state court claims to have full authority in the premises, and the people along the line of the road are anxious that the property shall continue under the state court's control. There is about $500,000 owing to local people for work and materials which the state court receiver proposes to pay in advance of the bondholders and outside creditors.

Work on the extension of the Cleveland, Lorain & Wheeling road to Cleveland is being pushed rapidly, and it is expected that the passenger trains will be running into Cleveland within a month. The Erie station and terminals will be used temporarily. The new extension is about twenty-five miles long. This company is building a five-mile extension of the Pigeon Run switch in the Massillon coal field district.

DEATH OF MR. CROCKARD.

An Aged and Highly Respected Citizen Passes Away.

Yesterday afternoon at 2 o'clock Mr. Hugh Crockard, sr., died at his home on Morrow street, aged nearly 83 years. He leaves three sons, Hugh, jr., shipping clerk at the Riverside works, John, the popular and efficient city wharf-master, and Will, factory manager at the Belmont mill, and two daughters, Misses Rebecca and Mary, who lived at home. His aged wife also survives, but is in feeble health. He will be buried to-morrow afternoon, the interment being private at the Peninsula cemetery, and the services taking place at 2 p. m. at his late residence at 1027 Morrow street. Mr. Crockard was universally respected by all who knew him, and was an old-time resident of this city, having for years owned and driven a dray. He was active until within a few years, in spite of his advanced age, and only recently succumbed entirely to the ravages of years. The family have the sympathy of a wide circle of friends in their bereavement.
